Golf in Belek

Belek, one of Antalya's most popular holiday centres, has become not only a brand name in Turkey, but one of the most popular holiday destinations in the world thanks to its unsurpassed natural beauty and perfect climate. Located 30 kilometers from Antalya, Belek has a seventeen-kilometer coastline lined with numerous five star hotels. Since the early 1990s, Belek has offered its guests the most comfortable holiday opportunity in the Mediterranean.

Among the features that make Belek such an attractive location in the region is its ease of access and the ancient cities situated nearby. The region hosted numerous civilisations throughout its thousands of years of history, and with its fertile lands has been a centre of attention in every period.

Though Belek has a typical Mediterranean climate, the freshwater streams which flow from the slopes of the Taurus Mountains give it different characteristics than other Mediterranean locations. Thanks to its large sand dunes, its beaches are sheltered from the harsh effects of the sea and wind.

With all these features in place, Belek offers a magnificent atmosphere, not only as a tourism centre, but as an area that contains all the distinctive Mediterranean characteristics.

For many years now, Belek has been one of the foremost holiday destinations for sports tourism in our country. It owes its preeminent position in this regard to its climate, geographical location and undeniably to its committed implementation of sustainable tourism policies. Belek and its hotels are highly popular with sports clubs and cater to their needs across all sports year-round. Belek has also become an indispensable destination for golf tourism in Europe.

Belek's superb climate is conducive to playing golf almost twelve months of the year. Belek has golf clubs of world standard, luxurious accommodation facilities and one of the best golfing infrastructures, which makes the area so attractive to golf enthusiasts. Belek has ten golf clubs and fourteen golf courses offering high-quality, professional service to Turkish sports tourism. Belek is also one of the biggest sources of income in this field. In 2012, a decision of the Council of Ministers decreed that particular new tourism hubs would focus exclusively on golf. These include the districts of Emişbeleni, Mahmutlar, Kargıcak, Okurcalar and Türkler in the region of Alanya, 50 kilometers from Belek. With this decision the volume of golf tourism in the region will significantly increase and Antalya will continue as an indispensable location for the sport of golf.

Belek has 47 five star hotels and holiday villages, 10 golf clubs, 14 golf courses, 50 football fields and more than 200 tennis courts that serve professional and amateur athletes.

Beyond Antalya

The Gulf of Antalya, located in southwest Anatolia, was known in ancient days as the Gulf of Pamphylia. The mountain ranges encircling the Gulf run parallel to each other along the coast, but later intersect each other at the Lakes Region to the north.

Travelogues, especially those written in the 19th century by Western archaeologists, historians, artists, architects, sailors and geographers, refer to the nature around Antalya as "extraordinary." The depiction of Antalya's natural environment by the 19th century traveller Karl Lanckoronski is especially noteworthy:

"Anyone who wants to witness the beauty of the mountains should come here. Mountains overlap each other as if in a hurry to reach the sea. The harmony of every shade of green and blue dazzles the spectator and constantly changes with the daily path of the sun. Waterfalls, rivers, date trees, minarets... In short, the imaginary depictions of magnificent landscapes by European authors can be found here for real."

The famed Ottoman navigator Piri Reis outlines the ports he explored around the Gulf according to the geographic location of the rivers and mountains rising behind them, just as he did in other areas of the Mediterranean.

In ancient times, the most familiar places located around the bay, such as Pamphylia, Lycia, Pisidia and Isauria, enabled visitors to enjoy the pristine environment and experience traditional ways of life. In light of the accounts of explorers throughout the centuries, those sightseeing trips provided plenty of opportunities for those interested in nature and history to make their own observations.

Flora and Fauna of Belek

In spite of covering a relatively limited area, the natural diversity of Belek's flora and fauna is quiet varied. The forests in the region are situated on sand dunes and form the most extensive vegetation. The dense Mediterranean stone pine forests are known to be local to the area. Under the dense pine forests are Mediterranean shrubs, and a thick cover of maquis runs towards the beach. These forests are highly rich in the variety of flowers and fauna they possess. Visually, the most beautiful and abundant scenes are also here.

Belek's natural habitat diversity is based on the wealth of its flowers. 58 families, 118 species, and16 subspecies of flowers have been classified. The most abundant flower species are found in the coastal dune vegetation (27 families, 51 species) and in stone pine forests (31 families, 51 species). In 1995, 40 unclassified plant species were identified. The classification of 48 exotic species from 28 botanical families was also made.

- While there are around 12,000 plant species found throughout Europe, this figure is around 10,000 in Turkey alone.
- Among the 600 endemic plant species that are found in the Mediterranean region, 500 are found in and around Antalya.
- There are more than 118 plant species in Belek and more than 40 are endemic to the area.

Belek and Natural Habitat

Since Belek had a dense population throughout the years, the number of species that live there is limited to those animals that could adapt to human habitation and small areas.

Close to 200 species of vertebrates are known to inhabit this region. Among these species are 38 mammals, 88 birds, 31 reptiles and 5 amphibians. There are also 51 invertebrate species worthy of note. In the coastal areas of Belek, animal species such as foxes, weasels, squirrels and hedgehogs are often seen. Belek is one of the best areas for bird watching and many bird species use this area as their wintering or nesting location. In addition, rare reptiles such as chameleons, sea turtles, land turtles, and freshwater turtles live undisturbed in these natural habitats.

The World Wildlife Foundation has always emphasised the importance of the coast of Belek to the preservation of the threatened loggerhead sea turtle (caretta caretta). This is because loggerhead sea turtles have very few breeding grounds in the world, Belek being one of them.

Pamphylia

The alluvial plain that stretches more than 100 kilometers along and 40 kilometers inside the eastern shores of the Gulf of Antalya was known as Pamphylia in ancient times. The Taurus Mountains rise to the north of the plain, watering it via numerous rivers and streams stemming from the steady rainwater throughout fall and winter. This area was always known as place of migration, hence the name Pamphylia, “The place of mingled tribes and races.”

In historical times the Gulf of Antalya was also known as the Gulf of Pamphylia. For this reason, even though it is situated to the west of the Gulf at the peninsula known as Lycia, some regard Phaselis as a Pamphylian city, although Pamphylia is generally considered to include the coastal plain east of the Gulf.

At the eastern edge of Pamphylia lies Alanya (Korakesion) and to the West lies Antalya (Attaleia). Between these two important cities are the cities of Side, Aspendos, Sillyum and Perge.

Hadrian’s Gate, Antalya

Antalya

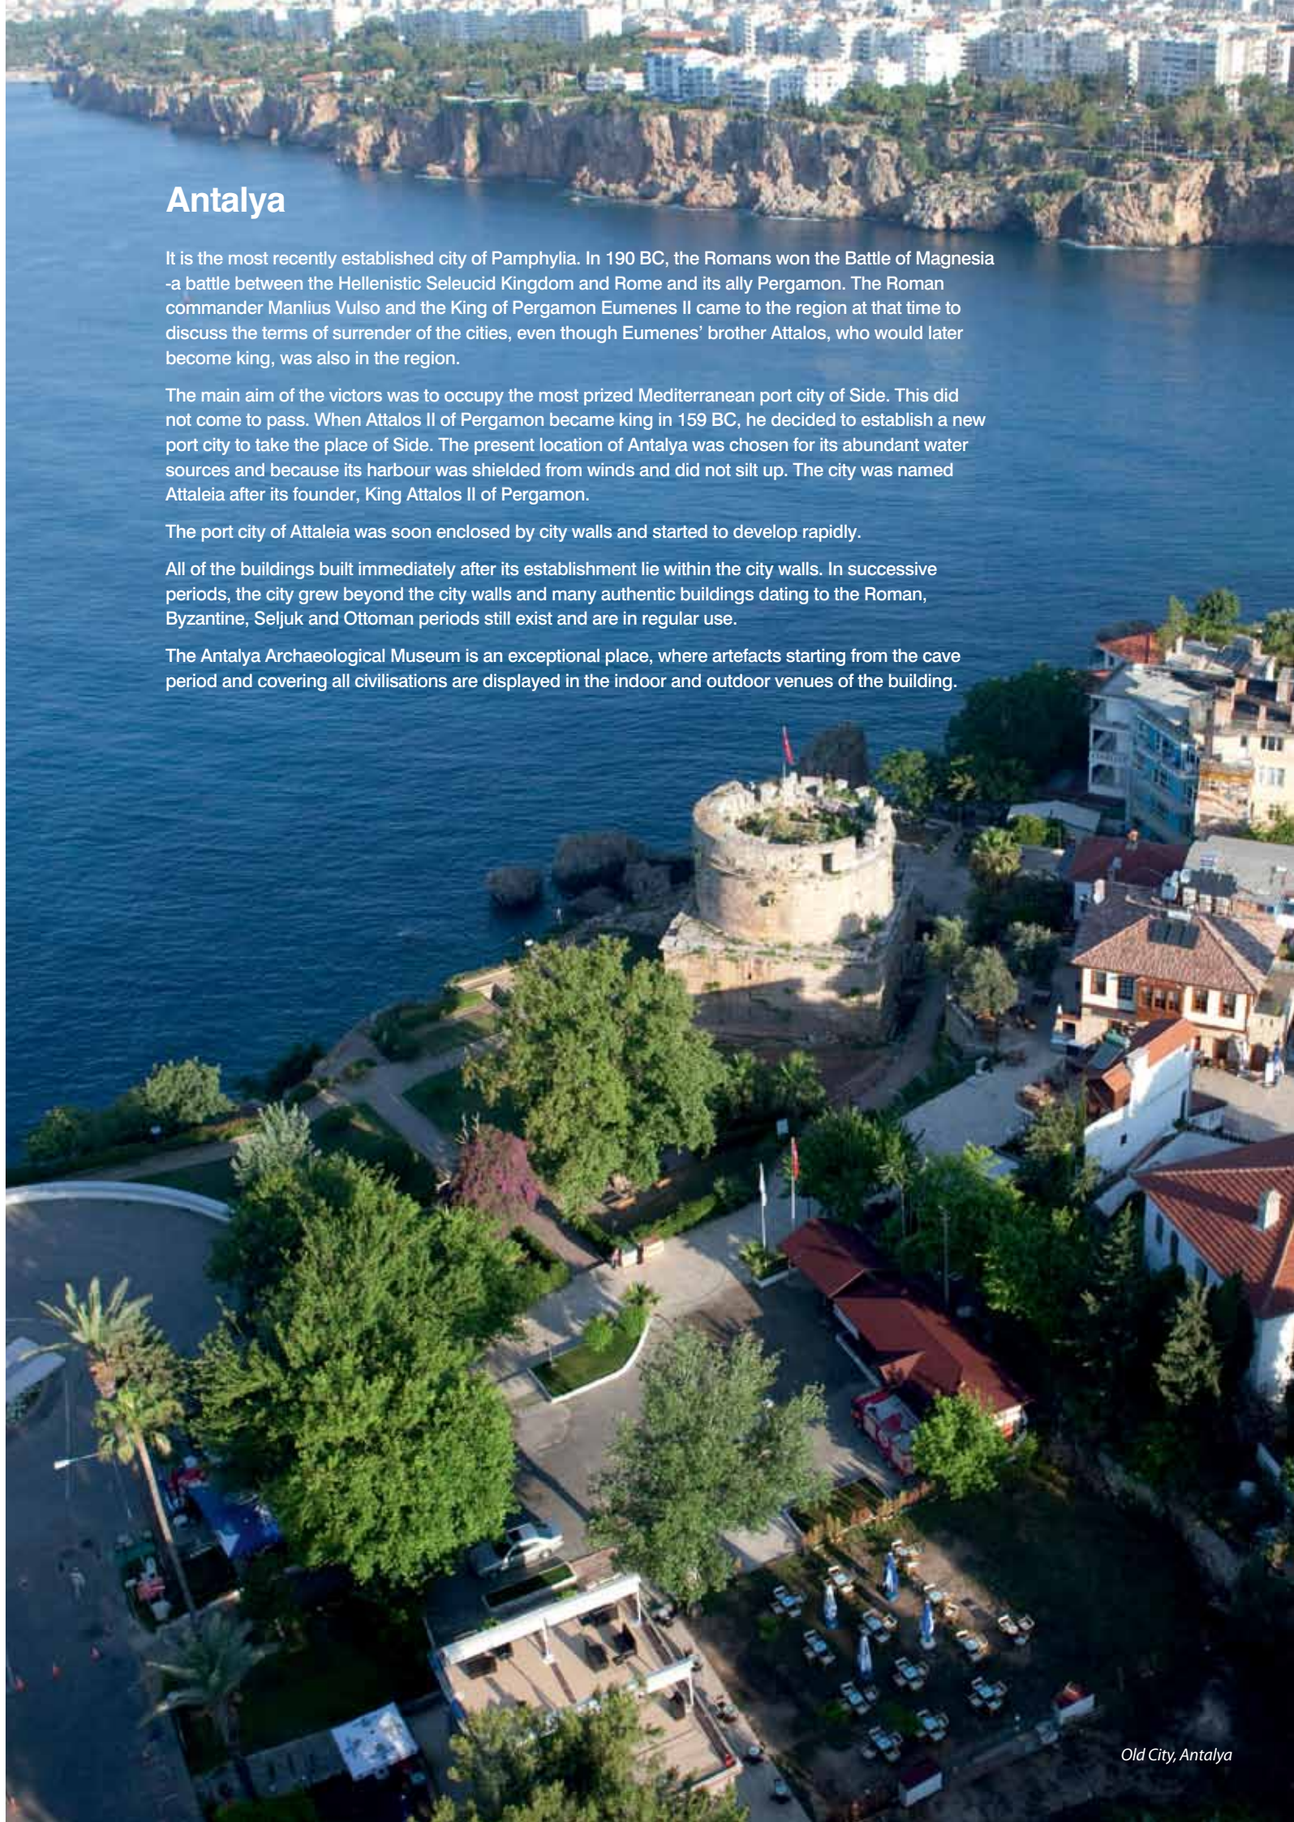
It is the most recently established city of Pamphylia. In 190 BC, the Romans won the Battle of Magnesia -a battle between the Hellenistic Seleucid Kingdom and Rome and its ally Pergamon. The Roman commander Manlius Vulso and the King of Pergamon Eumenes II came to the region at that time to discuss the terms of surrender of the cities, even though Eumenes’ brother Attalos, who would later become king, was also in the region.

The main aim of the victors was to occupy the most prized Mediterranean port city of Side. This did not come to pass. When Attalos II of Pergamon became king in 159 BC, he decided to establish a new port city to take the place of Side. The present location of Antalya was chosen for its abundant water sources and because its harbour was shielded from winds and did not silt up. The city was named Attaleia after its founder, King Attalos II of Pergamon.

The port city of Attaleia was soon enclosed by city walls and started to develop rapidly.

All of the buildings built immediately after its establishment lie within the city walls. In successive periods, the city grew beyond the city walls and many authentic buildings dating to the Roman, Byzantine, Seljuk and Ottoman periods still exist and are in regular use.

The Antalya Archaeological Museum is an exceptional place, where artefacts starting from the cave period and covering all civilisations are displayed in the indoor and outdoor venues of the building.



Old City, Antalya

Perge

Perge, the nearest of the Pamphylian cities to Antalya.

It had access to the sea through the Kestros River (Aksu) and was a major centre of the cult of Artemis, one of the most widely venerated of the Ancient Greek deities.

When St. Paul and his companions first embarked on their missionary journey the Bible states: “From Paphos, Paul and his companions sailed to Perge in Pamphylia...” This verse demonstrates the crucial link of the city to the sea. The gate on the eastern side of the city walls is known as the Port Gate because boats could reach the outskirts of the city from the Kestros River.

Perge was occupied by the Persians in the 6th century BC, while in the 4th century BC it was invaded by the armies of Alexander the Great. The city later came under the rule of the Romans and its ally Pergamon.

Perge was the most affluent city in Pamphylia and this affluence manifested itself in the city’s infrastructure in the 2nd and 3rd century. Since the beginning of the 2nd century, the civic and public buildings of Perge often contained the inscription of Plancia Magna, the high priestess of the Cult of Artemis, belonging to the prominent Plancius family.

This family emigrated from their native Italian homeland in the 1st century BC and acquired large tracts of territory in the vicinity of the city. It is known that the family spent a large portion of their income on developing the town’s infrastructure.

Perge is one of the major archaeological sites of Anatolia and the excavations made over half a century reveal a city of immense architectural worth. Perge has one of the largest ancient theatres of the region, a stadium surrounded by barrel-vaulted constructions, monumental city gates, imposing agora, baths, a colonnaded street, and impressive sarcophagi on the western foot of the Acropolis hill that never fail to impress visitors.

The Kestros River (Aksu), empties into the sea in in the Kundu region and a large number of hotels in Lara to the west offer visitors the opportunity to see both the old and the new face of the region.

Perge

Sillyum

Situated between Aspendos and Perge in the west it was founded on a hill. Surrounded by steep cliffs, it lies far removed from the sea and the Eurymedon River in the east and Kestros River (Aksu) in the west near Perge. The city never developed as much as Perge and Aspendos, probably because of its distance to the sea.

We know, however, that Sillyum, which was invaded by the Persians before, was spared by Alexander the Great.

West of the hill on which Sillyum was established and somewhat elevated are the tower, city gate, cistern, theatre and an odeon (some of which have fallen because of a landslide), as well as a large number of ruins which remain unidentified.

Sillyum is a calm and ideal place for those who want to stroll around an intact ancient city. A trip not only to the ancient city, but also to visit nearby villages is a memorable experience.

Selge (Zerk)

This mountainous town on the northwest of Side at the western slopes of the Eurymedon River (Köprüçay) is not situated on one of the main roads, unlike other Pisidian cities. This feature has kept the city from experiencing significant damage from invasions.

Sources reveal that the inhabitants of Selge acted as scouts for Alexander the Great on his incursion to the region and earned his friendship. However, Selge was defeated by the forces of the Hellenistic Seleucid Kingdom in the on-going conflict with the neighbouring town of Pednelissos (Kozan) in the 3rd century BC and had to pay a heavy indemnity.

According to sources the only traitor in Selge known by name was Logbasis, who colluded with the Seleucids and was subsequently branded as a traitor.

Two Roman bridges link Selge to the port city of Side on the eastern shore of the Eurymedon River; the Oluk Bridge and the Büğrüm Bridge on the deep Gökçesu Canyon west of the river. The ancient road, built with extraordinarily large stone blocks accompanies the modern highway.

Ruins show that the city built on three hills was surrounded by a wall with many towers. Among the places to visit is a theatre where most of the seats were hewn into the rock. Other sights of interest are the stadium, agora, cisterns, the stoa and the necropolis, which is situated between the three hills where most of the ruins are found.

Rising from the heights where Selge was founded is the Eurymedon River, tourists can participate in white-water rafting tours, or trek through the unspoiled natural environment where they can also witness traditional village life in the Taurus Mountains. Restaurants on both sides of the river serve local dishes. The trout raised in local fish farms delight visitors to this region.

Zeytintaşı Cave

Though this cave was only recently discovered in the Antalya region, it became more prominent over the years. The Zeytintaşı Cave in the district of Serik owes its success to its proximity to the tourism destination of Belek.

The cave has a multitude of stalactites, stalagmites and similar formations which were shaped over thousands of years. It is by chance that the cave was preserved until the present day without suffering any damage.

The cave lies 16 kilometers north of the district centre of Serik and is visited by a large number of local and international tourists thanks to its accessibility and the imposing natural setting.

Side

Side was not only the most important harbour of Pamphylia in ancient times, but also of the entire Mediterranean region. Established on a low peninsula, its magnificent theatre, agora (market area), monumental fountain, and the remains of baths used today as a museum, parts of city walls and the colonnaded street are still quite well preserved.

Located at the south eastern end of the peninsula, the Apollon Temple was restored by clearing up the surrounding area and by raising a few of its columns. Today, this site hosts many significant cultural events. And of course just 30 kilometers from the city of Side, parts of the huge aqueduct carrying water from the springs of the Melas (Manavgat River) still remain standing today.

The symbol of the city was the “pomegranate” that was ever present on coins and stones and which perhaps represented the wealth/productivity of the city.

The harbour of Side regularly silted up in the past, making shipping very difficult and requiring continual dredging to keep it open. In fact, in ancient times the Roman phrase ‘a harbour of Side’ was used to refer to a job that is never done.

Side could not offer resistance against Alexander the Great, who entered the region in the 4th century BC and whose inhabitants gave in to all the demands of this powerful king. According to sources, Alexander turned towards Aspendos when he learned that the people of Side yielded to his demands. Later, in 190 BC, the people of Side witnessed the naval battle and defeat of the Carthaginian General Hannibal against the navy of Rhodes, who were allied with the Romans.

Alongside the piracy activities in the region, it is also recorded that the largest slave market in the ancient world was set up in Side, and that the inhabitants of Side profited greatly from the slave trade despite being castigated by neighbouring cities. It is perhaps for this reason that the rulers of Side later erected a statue of Pompeius in the 1st century BC, who cleared the area of pirates, in an attempt to whitewash their sins.

The caravans carrying people, goods and wealth from the port of Side traversed inland routes along the Taurus Mountains. The magnificent city of Side was known for its importance on the trade route between coast and the mountains and for undisputed capability of its people.

Side was weakened in the 3rd and 4th century by the pillaging of the Isaurians living in the Taurus Mountains and also by the Scythians who descended down from the Black Sea. The Arab raids, which occurred all over the Mediterranean region during the 7th century contributed to its decline and subsequent abandonment.

Today Side is the central city of a well-planned touristic region. It has many hotels lined on both shores, shopping centres, entertainment and sports facilities and a vibrant nightlife. Together with its natural and historical attractions, Side is enjoyed by tourists from all walks of life.

Many artefacts found in the area are exhibited in the museum that was converted from a Roman bath.

Aspendos

It was established on a plain at the western shore of one of the most important rivers of Pamphylia, the Eurymedon River (Köprüçay).

The Persian subjugation of Anatolia, which started in the 6th century BC and lasted until the end of the 4th century BC, began to weaken towards the middle of the 5th century BC. While the Persians wanted to withdraw their fleets from the shores of Aspendos to the mouth of the Eurymedon River a few kilometers away to regroup and stave off their decline, they were attacked by the fleet of the Delian League of Athens led by the commander Cimon. What was to become known as the Battle of Eurymedon proved to be a decisive defeat for the Persians.

The Persians would also lose the land battle outside Aspendos where they had taken refuge.

Alexander the Great proceeded to Pamphylia through Lycia reaching Perge, whose loyalty he had already gained and later Aspendos. According to some scholars, the etymology of the name 'Aspendos' is linked to the word 'horse breeding.'

According to sources, Alexander demanded as tribute from the city silver coins and horses.

On the eastern shore of the Eurymedon River near Çakış village is a venue known as the "Cirit Place" by Turks where "cirit" is a traditional Turkish equestrian team game played by throwing javelins at the opposing team. The place name is proof that horse breeding, known to exist in the region in ancient times, was resumed by residents of later centuries.

Followed by the domination of Hellenistic kingdoms, Aspendos and its surroundings came under the rule of the Romans, Byzantines, Seljuks and Ottomans.

The famous Aspendos Theatre, which is among the most visited historical sites in Anatolia, was built by the local architect Zenon and is considered to be one of the best preserved theatres in the world. The theatre, which lies on the eastern slope of the hill where the city was established, is used for cultural events today as it was in the past.

The Stadium lies north of the Theatre.

It is known from the excavations of the Seljuk Bridge standing over the Eurymedon River that it was built on the foundations of a former Roman bridge. The city's agora, basilica, monumental public buildings and fountains, are located on the hill where Aspendos was founded, while the baths are located in the low-lying area south of the Acropolis hill. One of the most fascinating ruins of the city is the colossal aqueduct carrying water from the springs in the north.

The nearby shopping centres, tourist facilities close to the coast of Side and Perge, rafting activities on the Eurymedon River and other camping and sporting opportunities make Aspendos and surroundings one of the most preferred places to visit.

Termessos

Even though Termessos is a Pisidian city, it always was a part of the habitat and production area of the Antalya region. The city was established thirty kilometers to the northwest of Antalya between two rock formations and is famous for holding out against the forces of Alexander the Great. The ruins of Termessos are testimony to the affluence of the city, and remain largely intact thanks to the inaccessibility of its location. It is clear that the city's extraordinary wealth is largely based on the revenue generated by the ancient road linking the port cities of the gulf to Ephesus in Western Anatolia. Traces of this road still exist, even if they are limited to the valley north of the city, known as the Strait of Yenice.

The classical historian Arrianos tells of the city's unusually steep location and its relationship with the road as follows:

"The site is situated on a very high altitude and is surrounded by steep cliffs on all sides. The road leading from the narrow strait is also arduous, and descends the mountain from the city. There is another steep mountain opposite. Both of them form a strait, which is so narrow that even a handful soldiers could block it in case of defence."

Termessos is also known for an event that rarely comes up in discussions of ancient history: "After Alexander's death, an unrelenting battle began between Alexander's generals to get their own share of the empire. The stepbrother of Alexander, Antigonos wanted to occupy Anatolia and started a war with the commander Alketas. Alketas was defeated and subsequently fled to Termessos. Antigonos laid siege to the city. The elders of the city asserted that Alketas should be surrendered to Antigonos, while the younger citizens opposed this by saying that someone who has taken refuge cannot be turned over. The elders made a secret arrangement with Antigonos and led the young people away from the city under false pretences. Deprived of the support of the younger inhabitants of the city, Alketas committed suicide after which his body was turned over to Antigonos."

Sources tell us that Antigonos left after mutilating the body of Alketas for days. The grave of the unfortunate Alketas is among the most visited places of Termessos.

Termessos is a veritable open air museum with its city walls, agora, theatre, odeon, temples, cisterns, gymnasia and many remnants of sarcophagi. Today it is one of the most popular sightseeing destinations not only in Antalya, but also in Anatolia that is visited by tourists all over the world.

Alanya

The rocky and impregnable peninsula where Alanya is located was once the most famous pirate town in the Eastern Mediterranean in antiquity. In the 2nd century BC, the pirate Tryphon established a fortress on what was thought to be an unassailable rocky outcrop and made it into a base and shelter. In order to ensure the safety of the castle that was going to be known as Korakesion, Tryphon had a canal built to separate the peninsula from the mainland.

Tryphon built several fortresses in and around the Korakesion Castle. Tryphon further consolidated his rule, so that he could establish hegemony in parts of Syria and Anatolia and threaten the Seleucid Kingdom. The caves around the peninsula served as a hiding place for booty and slaves taken from the transport vessels. These caves are a favourite spot for tourists today.

The region was finally freed from pirate control during the Roman period by the renowned commander Pompeius. The castle originally built by Tryphon and expanded by other pirate rulers was demolished.

After Roman and Byzantine domination, Korakesion Castle was conquered by the Seljuks in 1221. From this date onward, the castle was renamed Alâiye after the conqueror Alâeddin Keykubat and used as the winter headquarters of the Seljuk sultans. Within the same century Alâiye and the surrounding areas came under the control of the Beylik of Karaman. In the 15th century the region was conquered by the Ottomans remaining under their rule and occupied until the advent of the Turkish Republic.

Alanya, due to its extensive variety of historical and natural attractions, has become one of the main centres of tourism of the Anatolian coast and Mediterranean region. The Alanya Castle, the ruins of ancient towns, its museum hosting countless artefacts, natural views, caves, pristine beaches and valleys and rivers where restaurants are lined are only a few of its attractions.

Further back it offers other charms such as the highlands which are reached through picturesque roads, alpine lakes, mountains with permanent snowlines, nomadic villagers who spend their summer months up in those highlands, the traditional migration to and from the mountains, sheep/goat flocks and feral horses…

One of the most startling features of Pamphylia is the abundance of waterways. These waterways determine the path of the significant roadways and bridges. The large number of bridges built in ancient and recent times is testimony to the strength of the economic activity of Pamphylia. Especially on the Alara River, between Alanya and Manavgat to the west, one can find beautiful examples from the Seljuk and Karaman periods, such as the Kemer and Ali bridges. These bridges are still in use despite the centuries.

The medieval ‘hans’ or inns near Alanya, have been restored and now serve as a place of dining and accommodation. The Şarapsa (Serapsu) Han, 20 kilometers west of Alanya in the district of Konaklı resembles a small castle. The Alara Han, on the eastern shore of the Alara River, just south of the Alara Castle which sits on top of a cliff is another such example.

Rising from the Taurus Mountains towering over Alanya, the streams born from waterfalls rush through the valleys to reach the sea, where nature supplies vibrant colours of green and blue in all its splendour. Old caravan routes accompany the modern roads which curl towards the mountains. These roads will lead you through an array of natural beauty to the mountain villages, where local village cafes serve beverages made from mountainous herbs.

The Uçan Waterfalls (Çündüre), which forms the water source of the Alara River, near the area of Demirtaş east of Alanya and other waterfalls shaped by the smaller streams flowing through the valleys create a wild splendour that is highly appreciated by local and foreign tourists.

Artefacts found in the excavations of ancient cities are prominently displayed in the Alanya Museum and portray the fascinating history of the region.

National Golf Club (27 Holes)

The 27-hole National Golf Club was opened in 1994 and established on an area spanning 920 acres covered with pine and eucalyptus trees. It is the first golf club in Turkey that was built according to the standards of the EPGA (European Professional Golfers' Association) enabling the hosting of international golf tournaments. The National Golf Club was chosen as the 42nd best golf club out of 1500 golf clubs in the Mediterranean in the year 2000. In 2001, it rose to 39th place among European clubs. In 2002 it was named as the 16th best golf club in the world by Golf Magazine journal. In the ranking of the world's top 100 golf courses in 2003 made by Germany's Golf Journal it came in at number 4. The National Golf Club was designed by David Feherty and David Jones in such a way as to preserve the natural scenery of the area. It was built by the American "Aquaturf" company in accordance with their design provisions. There is an 18-hole Championship course, 9-hole Academy course, 40 bay driving range, 2 putting greens, bunker and chipping practice area.

Cornelia Golf Club (27 Holes)

Cornelia Golf Club Cornelia Diamond Nick Faldo Golf Course is built on a 14,000,000 m^2 area that includes pine forests and sand ridges, offering a fantastic gaming experience. It is situated in a natural environment with lakes scattered throughout the course. The three 9-hole courses that connect to each other are the 72 par and 6,373 meter King Course, 72 par and 6,411 meter Queen Course, 72 par and 6,324 meter Prince Course. These were all designed by the renowned six-time Major winner Nick Faldo. In 2008, the Cornelia Diamond Nick Faldo Golf course was chosen as Europe's 14th best course and was selected among the 50 best golf courses in the world by Newsweek Magazine.

The Montgomerie Maxx Royal

(18 Holes)

This course was designed by Colin Montgomerie, one of the most accomplished players the sport of golf has seen, on a 104 hectare property covered with pine forests and sand ridges, and which also carries his name. The Montgomerie Maxx Royal Golf Course was opened on 1 October 2008 and is challenging and gently sloping with numerous of strategic options. The natural sandy ground was taken into account when designing and laying out the course, and these features were maximally utilised. The 18-hole course 72 par course is 6486 meters, the tees are approximately 600 m^2 per hole and the average per green is approximately 600 m^2. The Montgomerie Maxx Royal course has 8 lakes on its grounds and its close proximity to the sea provides local and foreign golfers a welcome change from other golf courses.

Gloria Golf Club (45 Holes)

The Gloria Golf Club was opened in 1997, but in 2005, after the opening of the 18-hole Gloria New Championship course, it moved to its new location and building. The Gloria Golf Club, with its 18-hole Gloria Old Championship course, 18-hole Gloria New Championship course, and 9-hole Gloria Verde course, is situated between the 45 hole championship courses. Just adjacent to the club building, on a west-south line there is a 48 bay 2 tier driving range approximately 26,000 m^2 in area. There are 5 pitching and chipping greens next to the club building, and a putting green of more than 800 m^2. In the Gloria Golf Club the handicap for both men and women is 36.

Robinson Nobilis Golf Club

(18 Holes)

World famous British golf player David Thomas has created the Robinson Golf Club Nobilis, set within a natural pine forest, and covering 750 acres. The Championship tee is 5103 meters. The fairways are wide and many rough-terrain areas have been left. The grass used at the golf course is suitable for colder climates and with the undulating and diverse greens it differs from other courses. The average green size is 600 m^2. It has one of the best playing surfaces among championship golf courses. This 18-hole par 72 championship course offers golf players an enjoyable experience with its stunning views, especially the lakes on the grounds of the golf course and the Acısu River that flows to its east. The club has the only floodlighted practice area in the region, which allows golfers to play in the evening. It was chosen as the ninth best golf course in Europe by Golfers Magazine in 2000 and the world's seventh best golf course by Golf Journal in March 2003.

LykiaLinks Antalya (18 Holes)

LykiaLinks Antalya was designed by the award-winning American golf architect Perry O. Dye. The course is located on an 80 hectare area that is both challenging and rewarding for golfers. The golf course was planned to make best use of the natural setting and ground advantage. Its location by the sea and the ability to play golf facing the waves and the mountains earned it a place in the "World's 100 Best Golf Courses" list of the British Golf World magazine in 2012. The 18-hole course is in excess of 6950 meters and plays to a par of 72. Each course has 5 black, yellow, blue, red and green tees, natural dye-style bunkers, and challenging and undulating fairways that incorporate many strategic options which require Scottish style "punch and run" shots. In fact, the course was inspired by famous Scottish golf courses.
